

One GC attending the HFMWeek Legal Summit in Hertfordshire last week decided the train and taxi combo or old fashioned automobile route was not for him.

To ensure he arrived at the top class hotel often frequented by the England soccer team in style, flexGC founder Tim Slotover commandeered his friend's helicopter for the day.

Slotover, who has been flying for more than 25 years, received special permission to land the chopper on the front lawn of the hotel.

However, things didn't go quite to plan as a stormy weather prediction for the following day meant he had to fly home and return in his neglected car.

Slotover offered members of the HFMWeek team a ride in his helicopter but after looking at some imposing clouds gathering above they mumbled something about having far too much work to do and politely declined.

But more concerning than the weather was that his fellow – and rival – GCs were taking part in a shooting competition on the ground. Luckily Slotover flew over the shooting match before any of his rivals could take aim at the helicopter.
